Failure is simply the opportunity to begin again, this time more intelligently.

- Henry Ford -

Many organizations embark on the journey called "Digital Transformation". Research shows that many organizations fail…. Even worse, while predictable… many organizations fail to learn from their failures.

The inability to learn and benefit from previous failures is actually the biggest loss, as organizations do not evolve, do not really mature.

Effective knowledge management might be the answer to this. How to seize the opportunities that can from failure and actually turn the failure into success?
